

INTRODUCTION

Spirit is one of the four sectors of the compass model for self-care. Each area contributes to and helps build our compassion resilience. Spirit encompasses connecting to our sense of purpose with intentionality, exposing ourselves to resilience in those we serve, and recreating ourselves through rest and play.

INFORMATION

Our sense of purpose provides direction to where we focus our energy, passion and growth. When we live our life in alignment with our core values, we have a strong sense of purpose. Being able to articulate our sense of purpose helps guide the choices we make. If our sense of purpose is not clear to us we become more vulnerable to compassion fatigue.

How our sense of purpose affects our well-being.

One way to increase our understanding of our sense of purpose is by developing a professional mission statement. Mission statements help us to be aware of what we want to drive our thinking, decisions and actions and support us to be intentional in our life and specifically, in our work. (Activity found in this section of the toolkit.)

Those in the healthcare sector are considered to be in a “helping profession.” One aspect of a mission statement for people in helping professions is obviously that the outcomes of their work are beneficial to others. Compassion fatigue can occur when we do not feel like what we are doing is making a positive impact on those we seek to serve; this may feel like we are not serving our purpose. In order to support our spirit, we need to see evidence that we are making a difference in the lives of our clients and to understand that they have a reservoir of resilience that, when combined with effective supports, can lead to optimal health and well-being.

Rest and play are also key components to the spirit sector. Taking the time for rest and time for play nourishes our ability to live out our sense of purpose. Our core values and sense of purpose can determine the types of activities or recreation that fulfill us.

In this section you will look at ways to articulate your sense of purpose, expose yourself to positive stories of the impact of your work and resilience of your clients, and reflect on your own rest and play. It also provides leaders with suggestions for systematizing the celebration of staff and exposure to stories of resilience.
